What's New In Desktop Alarm Clock?

Made to help you get a bit of work done right in the morning. The desktop clock alarm will display a countdown timer, LED status colors, a user definable alarm sound, and friendly countdown clock style interface. Desktop Alarm Clock can be toggled to run a script at :00, :05, :10, :15, :20, :25 and :30 every day to check for updates. Desktop Alarm Clock lets you set your system time to an arbitrary time in the future by adding it to a configuration file, or by using a time value specified via the command line. You may also specify a different file path for the time (rather than relying on the internal clock) or have the system set its time to a previously set value. Tested on: * Linux Debian GNU/Linux 8.0.0. * Linux Debian GNU/Linux 8.0.0. * Linux Debian GNU/Linux 7.9.0. * Linux Ubuntu 17.10. * Linux Ubuntu 16.04.3 LTS. * Linux Arch Linux 6.2. * Linux Arch Linux 6.2. An example of a command to set the system to 15:30 on October 31st, 2020: `exact 15:30 time +%H:%M` Alternatively, if you wish to set it using a previously set value as in the example above, you may specify it as follows: `exact 15:30 --time 13:30 time +%H:%M` Additionally, it supports being set to an arbitrary future time via a time specified in milliseconds via the command line: `exact 13:01:36 --time -363481726` This should show the time at 20:01, but if it doesn't, then check that the clock is set to UTC. Passive Proxies allow you to utilize the security features of proxies on your PC without the need to do any configuration.
