Dec 30, 2017 Even though the UK is now taking an increasingly hard line on cyber-security, the rest of the world is starting to catch up. We are currently in a serious information war and the victims are not nation-states but their citizens. we need a framework for tracking these cyber-attacks and keeping these criminals out of our 'house'. An important new opportunity comes from the establishment of the UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) in Vienna. The Office is committed to the control of drug trafficking and other illicit drug activities. The Office has put its hands on its digital trail. First in the form of a strategic information policy. [The Office has currently published by the end of the year a set of guidelines on systematic Internet usage on or by global law enforcement and intergovernmental organizations. Over time we will get a much better idea of the types of cyber-attacks that have been directed at states and their citizens and governments. Most importantly, we will gain a better understanding of what exactly is being done to help citizens in the cyber-battle for their lives. In an announcement yesterday (Thursday 30 March), the British embassy in Lebanon confirmed that the $57 million agreement was signed by Bassam Naim, the director general of the municipality, and Robert Dams, the company's senior vice president of defence, space and cyber, who is also a leading member of the British Joint Intelligence Committee. Bassam Naim said: "This agreement is a boost for the economic and technological cooperation between Beirut and the UK. The transfer of technology is essential for the future of the city. We have started a long journey in civil defence and with BAE Systems, and this deal is one of the new projects we are working on. It creates a vast alliance with the potential to transform the city and the Lebanese state in the coming years.
