Descent Vector is a high-speed single-player endless runner which launches you through a procedurally generated gauntlet of sci-fi space stations, asteroids, and industrial megastructures. Buckle-up and take control of your space pod as you rocket through high stakes obstacle courses spanning multiple alien star systems. Test your reflexes, improve your skill, and become a master leaderboard pilot where speed is your play-thing. Campaign missions start easy and increase in difficulty as you learn to pilot your space pod. With each successful landing you'll progress to a new mission with increased difficulty. Master each mission to unlock its endless mode providing new challenges with added acceleration. You're going to crash, so you might as well crash in an adrenaline fueled blaze of glory. Impact space stations at high-speed, wreck booster rockets, destroy communication satellites, and punch-through solar panels. Experience brilliant zero-g physics based explosions as you tear through space installations. Use power-ups to your advantage by changing the behaviour of your space pod. Phase Shift through solid objects, slow your descent for more reaction time, and repair damage to extend your run. Compete globally on the leaderboards and state your claim to the best endless mode distance for each

GREAT DEEDS IN SPACE 1

GREAT DEEDS IN SPACE 1 takes all the fun of the original Great Deeds in Space and adds a bunch of new levels such as the Mars Yard and the Ice Zone. Further, a couple of new power-ups have been added that make it more challenging. You can now have an invincible robot drone on your back through which you can shoot enemies for ammunition and extra power-up rewards. The rocket drone and the tractor drone have been added. The tractor drone lets the ship fly fast without charging and the rocket drone gives you a speed boost.

Descent Vector is a thrilling single-player space runner where you pilot a spaceship with the sole purpose of completing each thrilling campaign mission as quickly and efficiently as possible. Play through the gauntlet of procedurally generated space missions unlocking the endless mode where the objective is to travel as far as possible. The Rules: -• Final countdown, start and stop on the pad -• Unplug all devices when not in use -• Zero speed landings are bad, crash is good -• Only tilt your screen -• Use spaceships, rockets, and bombs to clear obstacles, use shields to shoot lasers/ballistics, make your spaceship jump/activate -• Health packs are life-saving -• Use power-ups to change your flight behavior -• Each stage is a gauntlet. You're going to crash, so you might as well crash in an adrenaline fueled blaze of glory -• Game continues in endless mode and progress is saved when you jump to a new stage, not at the end of each stage Features: -• High-speed single player endless runner -• Physics based destruction -• Procedurally generated stages -• Completely free Descent Vector: Space Runner Serial Key is available for free, limited time only on the iOS App Store. I call this an exhibition game, and it's kind of just a demo of other games I've been working on. You can get any number of aircraft types. There are... well there are like a lot of them, and all of them take off, land, and can be flown in some capacity as a single player, or in co-op (which is extremely arcadey). We've just released update 0.1.4 that includes all sorts of little changes and bug fixes, plus it'll be available on Xbox One on July 12th. You can download it here: In the meantime, I have one last video to share, it's a bit of a preview of things that are coming up in the future and how aircraft are going to be looking. The transitions between the different aircraft types are a bit wonky still. Bear with it. If you are interested, the game is free on iOS and Android right now, and will be available on Xbox One on July 12th. The game is extremely difficult, but we've made it much more user friendly. What's new in Descent Vector: Space Runner:

Video game It's not often a video game has such a lengthy name, but when you look at the pedigree of Space Race, it doesn't seem so bad. Created by Piranha Games -- founded by Jarrad Davis and James Stevenson -- it's also the first third-party AAA title on the PS4. The team was well-known for the tactical shooter series Dust 514 as well as PlayStation 3 and Xbox 360 title Transformers: Fall of Cybertron, and they've learned a lot since working on the latter, says Davis. The title was shown off last fall by Sony at the PlayStation Experience, where the developers behind it were proud to say the game received a promotion to Elite status shortly after, at $4 million. Machinima recently got a few hands on time with Space Race, and you can watch the video below. Just select Cast to Television. A few screenshots are below. We're interested in discussing this topic with anyone who has played or worked on Space Race. What did you think of the gameplay and visuals? We'll continue to update this post as additional videos, photos, interviews and whatever else become available to us. Space Race is in beta and the team will be collecting feedback from players when they release the game next week. SOA40, also known as Space Race, is one of the first third-party developed titles for the PS4. So how much does it cost to develop games? What are the biggest challenges of working on this title? Let us know in the comments below. Update, November 7: We've gotten more hands on time with the beta. The producer, Steve Baile explained: "Real-time strategy is a very complex genre which has many elements to cover. In addition to the demands of a campaign we've also included moddable game modes. Our mid-range target is $4M. Our challenge is being able to offer good value in the limited number of territories we wish to release in. And lastly, the complexity of various game components makes bugs a constant issue on the development side." Last word goes to Baile, as there were problems with the beta, which were corrected: "Also, the PS4 has some software issues with the player being able to break the game if they don't use the DualShock 4 controllers properly (doing an unplug and plug again). They're working on this, these aren't game breaking." Thus,
