A: If you want to add a new "SeekStop" icon to your tray, you have to create a new icon and add it to your tray. Go to Start > Computer > Icons and select the very first icon under "Trash Icon". Right-click it and select "Properties". Add the icon you want to use instead of the one that is already there and in the middle of the "Icons" panel. It's only that simple. Seasonal fluctuations of [3H]2,4-dinitrophenol in rat brain and pineal gland. [3H]2,4-Dinitrophenol (2,4-DNPH) has been widely used as an indicator of intraneuronal degradation of catecholamines and indoles. In this study, we examined the effects of seasonal changes on the disposition of 2,4-DNPH in rat brain and pineal gland. Pineal 2,4-DNPH was identified by sucrose density gradient centrifugation. A large amount of 2,4-DNPH-labeled substances was found to be recovered in the synaptosomal fraction after its incubation with [3H]2,4-DNPH, but not in the nuclear fraction. Rat pineal 2,4-DNPH was present in a low molecular weight form (hydrophilic) which exhibits a light shift by alkali treatment, and in a high molecular weight form (hydrophobic) which is devoid of such light shift. In particular, as early as 17 h after intraperitoneal injection of [3H]2,4-DNPH, the radioactivity of the hydrophilic form was found in pineal, but not in brain. In contrast, radioactivity of the hydrophobic form persisted in the brain for as long as 24 h after the injection. In pineal, however, radioactivity was higher in the hydrophobic than in the hydrophilic fraction. Thus, there was a large difference between the amount of radioactivity of the hydrophobic form in the pineal and that of the hydrophilic form in the brain. These results suggest that the hydrophobic form of 2,4-DNPH in the pineal may be endogenous, and the hydrophilic form may be exogenous.1. Technical Field The present invention relates generally to
