Wednesday, April 26, 2007 Too old to learn... The fact that I get to teach English here in Milan is a thrill. It has been a long wait (since September 2006) since I was last involved in teaching English. Even before that, I learnt all of my English from classes with Miss Anshu and Miss Balu in Delhi. I am working with a very nice girl, Anna, who is an intern at the high school. She is very easy to work with, very helpful and has a great deal of patience. I feel I am learning something every day from her. And it's really a beautiful thing for me to see that her best friend is also my roommate for the next 7 months. I am a huge fan of the friendship between my students and me, and Anna and I have been inseparable since I came here. Right now, the school is celebrating our first anniversary as its own. It was last November when our director decided to make the high school an autonomous entity (separate from the middle school). He thought this was a good idea since we were growing rapidly and the students needed to develop their own standards and systems. It wasn't easy since it meant that we were getting ourselves a principal, a middle school principal and a high school principal. We all met once a month to discuss how we could improve as individuals and as a team. I love working at a school like this where the students are so eager to learn, are eager to be here and want to make a difference. They have also shown us that you can't just leave them to their own devices once they are out of the family system. They need to be made responsible for themselves. The first half of this year has been great. The students and the principal are all very friendly and helpful. We have an enormous amount of support from the people in the school. The school has an open door policy and people have been happy to help us any time we need it. This is a new experience for me because I am used to being a teacher in the system, and I am taking it easy. I find it a wonderful thing to just be able to get back to teaching in a day-to-day way. Actually, I didn't even feel a difference since I left Delhi. I am happy to be back at the school. When I think back, it is truly amazing that I have learned all that I have in

What's New In?

The present invention relates to electro-optical systems for reading and/or writing data stored in a plurality of locations and, in particular, to an apparatus and method for reading data from a plurality of storage locations in an integrated circuit memory. Many integrated circuit memories are organized as a matrix of memory cells arranged in rows and columns with address and data lines for writing and reading data to and from the cells. The design of this type of matrix memory is well known, and various proposals have been made to access these memories in a manner to reduce the access time and the semiconductor area required for each access. Such proposals have been made for a variety of matrix memory configurations such as the NOR, the NAND, the.times.ROM, the.times.ROM, and the LATCH configuration. FIG. 1 illustrates a fragment of a matrix memory having rows and columns organized in a ROM (read only memory) array configuration. This circuit provides a row decoder to address the rows of the memory and a column decoder to address the columns. The data to be stored in each memory cell is written at the intersections between the memory rows and columns. A memory cell is activated by applying a signal to the word line representing the row address, and a signal is applied to the complementary bit line representing the column address. As long as the word line signal is applied, the contents of the memory cell are maintained. A memory cell which has been addressed is selected by applying a signal to the bit line, thereby causing the memory cell contents to be coupled to the sense amplifier. The memory cell sense amplifier then couples the output from the memory cell to a data line in the circuit, thereby providing a data signal which indicates the data stored at the row and column address on the memory cell. One disadvantage of this type of memory configuration is that only one column of the memory can be accessed at a time, and the access time is accordingly longer than it would be if the memory cells in each column were accessed simultaneously. As integrated circuit memories become more dense, there is an increasing demand for the ability to read and write data in columns of memory cells which are located in close proximity to one another. One proposed way to achieve this is to provide a sub-array of memory cells arranged in a spaced apart pair of columns. Such a configuration is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,712,496, which is assigned to the same assignee as the present invention. This patent describes the use of a row decoder and
