By highlighting these facts, the first chart shows us the historical dimensions of the region. The natural disasters, the lack of economic prosperity and political unrest have especially been felt in the Middle Eastern countries. For instance, Syria has one of the oldest civilizations, Iraq is still a conflict-torn country, Palestine's borders are in conflict and Iran's oil and gas resources are under intense threat from neighboring countries. Some of the Arab countries with very low GDPs are Yemen, Tunisia and Oman. However, we should not forget about the undoubted progress made over time. This is a very significant chart, as it shows that some Arab countries have moved forward within a relatively short period of time, reaching an economic level higher than many European and Asian nations. The following two charts show two African nations with very high GDPs. We are still dealing with the memories of the colonial past, which is evident from the diamonds in the map and the populations of the African continent. Unsurprisingly, the new world order is gradually reshaping the existing African states. Nevertheless, some of the African countries have made outstanding contributions to the development of economic, cultural and political institutions.

The following chart shows the mixed success of Latin American countries. They are still experiencing the effects of the long-term civil wars, while trying to overcome the consequences of the collapse of the Soviet Union and striving to prepare themselves for the challenges of globalization. In relation to China, we find that it is still striving to catch up with the global trend. The GDPs of Russia and the United States are important factors that helped both in overcoming the influence of the Soviet Union and also in influencing the developing world. Nevertheless, it is important to take into account the fact that the geography of these countries has certain limitations. The Asian countries are a very different thing. Among these countries, Afghanistan, the Republic of Korea and Japan are expected to rise faster than the others. None of the Asian countries is affected by environmental issues. The growth rates of most of them vary from 3 to 7 percent.

Nevertheless, the Asian countries include many islands and archipelagos, including the disputed island of Cyprus, the southern islands of Indonesia, Vietnam, the northern islands of Japan and the Republic of Korea, and the islands of Hong Kong and Taiwan. The question of the islands is discussed at the beginning of this study. As a result of the devastating earthquake in Haiti, the other developed countries of Latin America are also under the pressure of disaster relief. The most surprising thing is that poverty has not prevented them from achieving outstanding economic results 6d1f23a050
